Why Study Global Media?

Our Global Media programme is designed for students eager to engage critically and creatively with the rapidly evolving world of media and communication. This programme examines the cultural, political, and aesthetic impact of media and digital technologies on our increasingly interconnected world.

As a Global Media student, you'll explore how media and communication technologies drive globalisation, shaping our social, political, economic, and cultural landscapes.

You'll investigate how these technologies transform information exchange, influence our work and worldviews, and redefine relationships between nations and communities.

Our curriculum provides you with both theoretical and ethical frameworks, as well as practical tools, to analyse today's highly digitalised and mediated national and global cultures. You'll gain insights into historical and contemporary contexts of global media, preparing you for roles as communicators, researchers, analysts, or advocates in international settings.

Course Name: BA (Global Media)

Study Abroad

Erasmus and other study abroad exchanges are available for students on this programme: we have partnerships with universities in Belgium, Estonia, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovakia and Spain, and students are also eligible to compete for exchange places in North America. The period of study abroad is generally one semester. If you are taking a modern European language as part of your degree, you are expected to spend a semester abroad studying through that language.

Work Placement

You will have the opportunity to undertake a work placement in a company such as a media organisation; in a production company; volunteering; in the technology sector; or in the public sector. You can choose to either do a one-semester or full-year internship. The programme will also facilitate students to undertake their own placements internationally.
